HIS SODA DECODED

What does his drink say about his personality?

Move over, frozen yogurt. Soda is now a go-to date treat, with shops popping up all over Utah County.

Between fruit purees, flavor shots, half and half splashes and whipped cream garnishes, soda shops take drinks to the next level. Employees invent nicknames for drink combinations, which are sometimes based on the customers who order them. A light-hearted analysis of some of the popular combinations can subtly signal what a date is thinking when he orders one of these specials.

BRO/BOYFRIEND?

BY DEVYNN MACLENNAN

The number of “Provo All-Stars” seems to be growing, and the quest to figure out if a guy is boyfriend material or if he’s just a bro is difficult. If you’re having a hard time deciphering whether a guy is just a brofriend or has potential for a boyfriend, ask yourself:

1. When you tell him a story about your day he:
 - a. Listens and asks you questions about it
 - b. Seems indifferent
 - c. Turns the story into something about himself
2. Does he live at The Village, Alpine Village or any place with the word “village” in it?
 - a. No, he would never!
 - b. Yes, but only because his roommates made him
 - c. Yes
3. When you two are talking he:
 - a. Looks into your eyes and seems interested
 - b. Looks at his phone half the time, but the other half he’s listening attentively
 - c. Is on his phone watching videos, but then “courteously” asks you to watch them with him
4. His Instagram feed is filled with:
 - a. Pictures of him and his friends on adventures
 - b. Pictures of him at all the latest parties
 - c. Shirtless selfies of him at the gym
5. On a typical Thursday night you could catch him:
 - a. Rock climbing at The Quarry
 - b. At a house party
 - c. Working out
6. His summer plans are:
 - a. Go to school, work, or find an internship
 - b. Unplanned — either school or summer sales
 - c. Summer sales
7. It’s a warm sunny day outside and he wears:
 - a. T-shirt and Vans
 - b. T-shirt, a snap back and flip flops
 - c. A tight T-shirt, a snap back and white sunglasses behind his head
8. It’s movie night and you’re dying to watch a chick flick. You suggest one and he:
 - a. Agrees, but makes you promise he’s in charge of the movie next time
 - b. Tries to convince you out of it but then caves and watches it with you reluctantly
 - c. Laughs, and then makes you change your choice

MOSTLY A BOYFRIEND MATERIAL

As far as we can tell, you’re in the “bro” clear. Your guy seems to care more about the outside world than his man bun and work out schedule. Good job—he’s a keeper!

MOSTLY B POTENTIAL

Your guy is in the in-between stage of boyfriend and brofriend and could go either way. He might be influenced by his squad of bros and needs you to keep him from going full-bro. Don’t write him off, but don’t go in full force either.

MOSTLY C BROFRIEND

He might have a perfect smile, and a body that goes with it, but your guy should definitely be in the bro-zone. Don’t confuse his cockiness with confidence; this boy bleeds “bro” through and through. Keep him as a friend, and leave him at that.

LONG-DISTANCE SUMMER ADVICE

Talk through expectations

Before parting for the summer, establish clear expectations. Figure out what each of you wants during the summer apart.

Make a bucket list

It’s important to keep in contact, but take advantage of present opportunities.

Surprise them

Remind each other you care for one another and are still thinking about them other than saying it via text message.

WHAT GUM SAYS ABOUT KISSING

The type of gum a person chews can say a lot about their kissing style. Are they spicy? Fruity? Sweet? Be aware of the messages sent with chewing habits, but don't take these bubbles of advice too seriously.

Cinnamon chewers are a bit rare, not everyone goes for cinnamon gum. Those who are cinnamon chewers are more hardcore than average.

Spearmint chewers are average kissers, but it's not a bad thing. They're consistent, and don't push boundaries. Simple and sweet.

Peppermint chewers know exactly what they want. They are charmers, but will likely not be seen again after one night.

Fruity chewers are sloppy, but a lot of fun. Fruity chewers are people with colorful personalities who know how to have a good time.

Bubble gum flavor never lasts, and neither will the relationship. Three kisses and he or she ditches.

Bubble Tape chewers' dates never end. They're in for the long haul.

PROS AND CONS OF POST-DATE TEXTS

BY MIRANDA FACER

PROS

SHOWS INTEREST

Sending a friendly PDT, especially one that says you would like to go out with your date again, is an easy way to show interest in a person.

GIVES POSITIVE FEEDBACK

"(PDTs) are good because they take the guesswork out of wondering if it was a good date or not," said Daniel Williams, a senior studying neuroscience. "It's good to hear if they had a good time."

KEEPS DIALOGUE GOING

If you're still eager to talk to your date after the evening is over, a PDT can open the door for continued communication. However, keep in mind that many dates end near bedtime, so he or she may not respond until morning.

CONS

REMOVES THE MYSTERY

"I think the goal with any communication you have with (someone you like) is to not inundate them," said Alissa Chase, a junior studying economics. "You want yourself to be exciting and if you try to talk to them too much after a date, they may get bored or think you're too eager."

GETS THEIR HOPES UP

Sometimes people send PDTs to be polite, even if they are not interested in their date. If you do not want to go on another date, do not send them a post date text. If your date sends you a PDT, send a brief but non-encouraging reply. This allows you to be polite but clear about your (lack of) intentions.

SMOTHERS THE SPARK

"The big thing with PDTs is they completely depend on the person," said Colton Keddington, a sophomore studying political science and economics. "Some people may start to feel smothered and think, 'I was with you 30 minutes ago; you don't need to text me.'"

THE SEVEN DWARFS YOUR ROOMMATES DATE

Why not use a beloved childhood movie to look at current dating trends? This parody using Disney's "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" pokes fun at the different types of people your roommates date.

SLEEPY

Sleepy comes over late at night and often knocks well after curfew. After class, chances are he is catching up on his ZZZZs or sprawling across the couch like he owns it.

GRUMPY

Grumpy needs a major attitude adjustment. The dark negativity cloud that follows him around is beginning to affect the entire apartment.

SNEEZY

Sneezy is always sick, and rather than staying at home, he makes the apartment couch his recovery bed. His germ spreading is depleting the supply of hand sanitizer and disinfecting wipes in the apartment.

DOC

Doc is a stereotypical know it all. Though he is only pre-med, he would like you to think that he is also pre-dental, pre-law and a humanities buff on the side.

DOPEY

Dopey is book smart, but how he has survived to get by in life is a mystery. His people and conversational skills are minimal, yet something about Dopey's gullibility keeps her going back to him.

HAPPY

Happy seems to think of nothing but sunshine and rainbows. The glitter that seems to exude from Happy's every pore is getting to be a little bit blinding.

BASHFUL

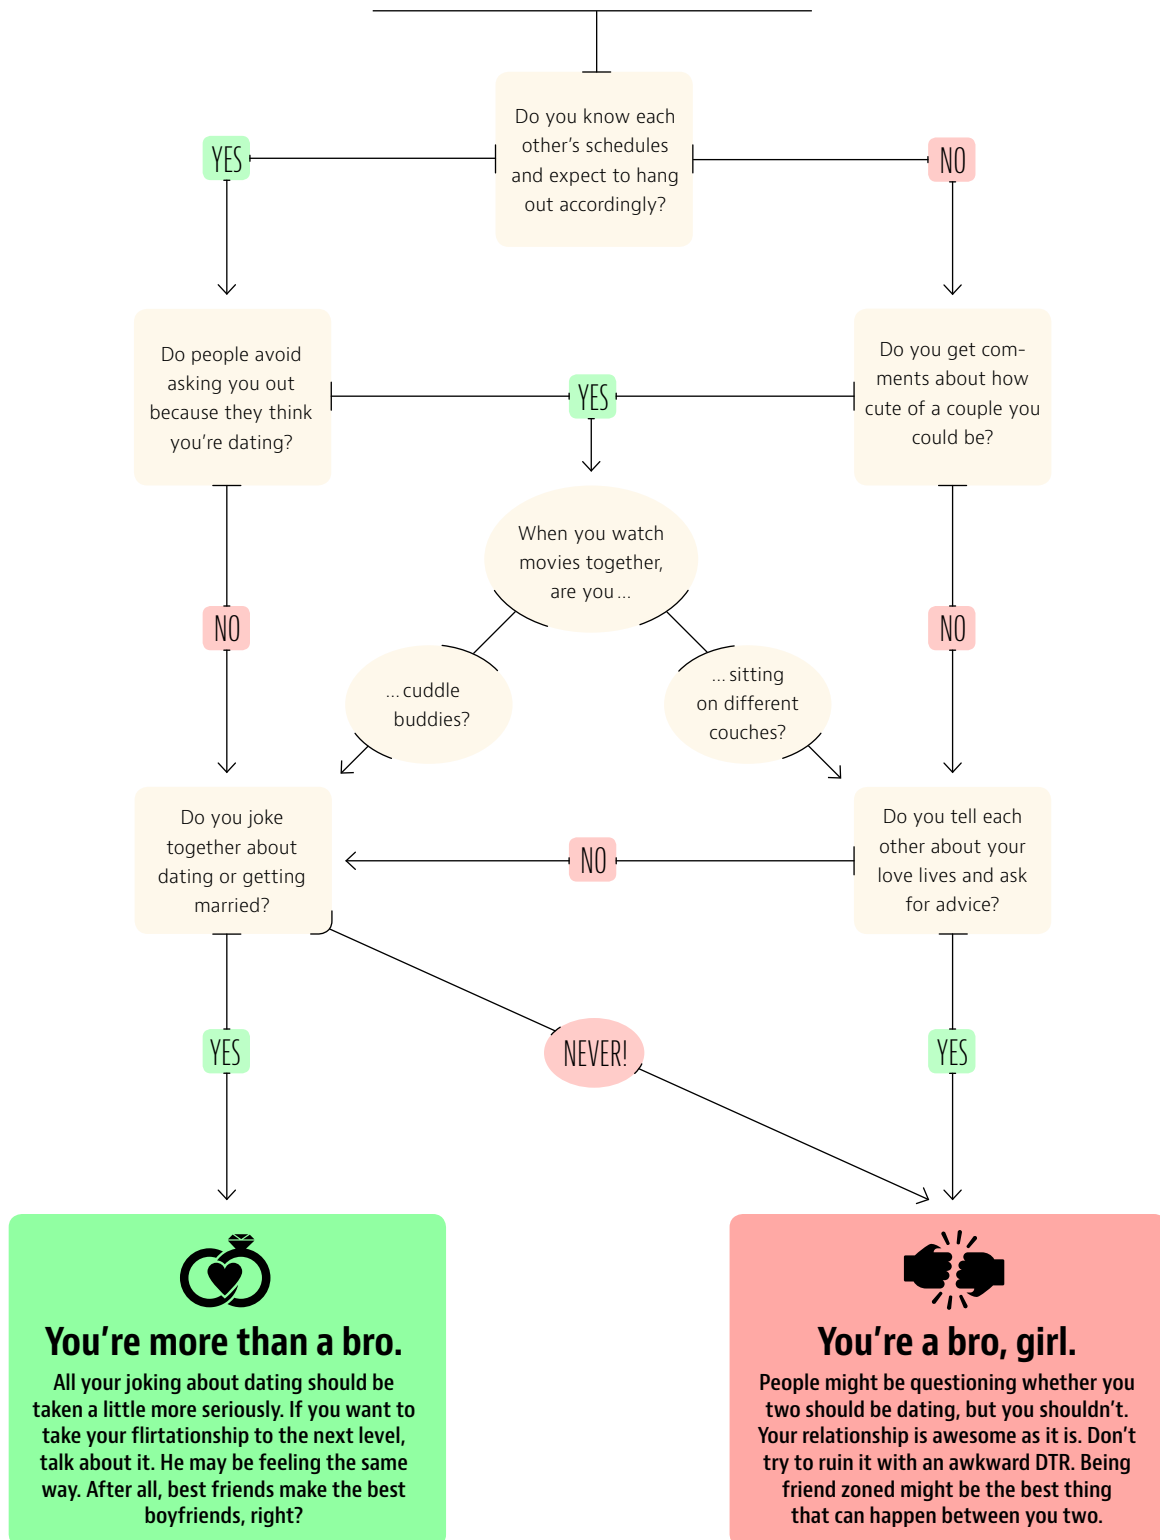

Bashful has been around for several months, but has yet to make a concrete move. His timid ways were cute at first, but now are just plain annoying.

HELP HER HACK IT

Everyone has been there before — a friend gets dumped and is devastated. Here are some tips to help alleviate the misery, and help her get back to being herself.

Talk It Out

Whether it's while sitting on the couch with tons of blankets, going on a drive to get ice cream or eating chocolate cake, talk it out. Let her explain every detail of the breakup and listen attentively.

"Just let them vent to see where they're at, and then take them out to get their mind off things," said Delaney Hilton, a freshman studying physiology and developmental biology.

After a difficult breakup, a friend needs someone to listen without judgement as she dissects every aspect of her broken relationship.

Distract Them

Don't let a friend beg for her boyfriend back. Keep her busy by meeting new people, trying new things and going new places.

"Try to make them laugh, do fun activities like go hiking, go to the movies or do something active so her mind is completely off of it," said Sophie Lex, a sophomore studying exercise science.

Make a dinner group, get old friends together or tell her to take advantage of her new single status. What ever it is, make sure she doesn't have ample free time to reminisce and become re-attached to her recent ex.

Make a Game Plan

Tell a friend to make a list of all the things she wanted to do while she was in the relationship, but never had the time to do. Write down a list with a detailed plan on how, and when, she's going to accomplish them with the end goal of moving on.

"You have to tell them to move on subtly, let them know that there are other guys out there and then help her find them," said Janel Reynolds, a sophomore majoring in athletic training.

Make her feel motivated and excited, which will help get her mind off the breakup and help her move forward.

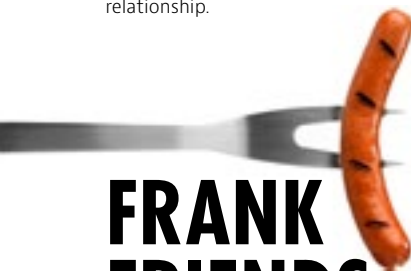

Time, Time, Time

One of the hardest parts of a breakup is coping with the extra time that was once dedicated to a significant other.

"You need to make sure you're there for them, but let them open up to you," said Lex.

A friend will most likely feel lonely between the initial breakup and accepting what happened, and will probably consider reaching out to her ex. Don't let her. Spend time with her doing homework, making dinner or binge-watching TV. Remind her that being single isn't the worst thing that's ever happened to her, and that she is loved.

FRANK FRIENDS

There are many different types of friends. Friends who always give compliments, friends who can make a joke in any situation, friends who are the downers of the group and finally, friends who are brutally honest. Frank friends are necessary in dating.

"There's a lot of headache in relationships when you don't know what a person is thinking and you're getting mixed signals," said Daniel Dekker, a senior studying biology. "You need a friend who has your back and will tell you like it is."

— VICTORIA WILKINS

IGNORANCE IS NOT ALWAYS BLISS, GOOD FRIENDS TELL IT HOW IT IS:

- "There's an entire floret of broccoli in your teeth."
- "She's a 10, you're pushing a seven, maybe."
- "Plaid shirts do not go with plaid shorts."
- "The, 'your mom' joke was only funny the first time."
- "You're overcomplicating things."
- "Try to see it from her perspective."

LOVE LANGUAGES

BY VICTORIA WILKINS

TWO cents

According to Dr. Gary Chapman, Director of Marriage and Family Life Consultants, individuals feel and show love in five different ways that he calls “love languages.” Most people have one primary love language, or one main way of feeling loved. Knowing how someone feels love is important in relationship communication.

Here are some ways to show love using Chapman’s five love languages:

A person who feels most loved through words of affirmation looks to hear or read why he or she is loved. They want to hear why they are special and matter to others. Positive ways to express love to them include romantic cards or notes, compliments or bragging about them. This does not mean they are fishing for compliments or are looking for a sweet-talker. They require genuine and meaningful words.

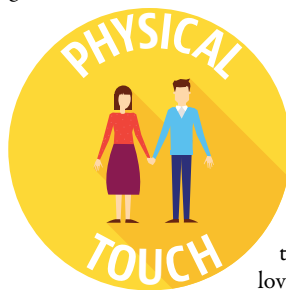

A good way to show love to this person is by giving real, undivided attention. While spending time with this person, silence the phone and avoid other distractions. These people succeed when they get to spend uninterrupted time with their loved ones. Quality time also includes doing quality activities together and having great conversations. Failure to listen causes them emotional distress. Be prepared to really listen, hear and converse with them.

Those who feel loved through acts of service enjoy it when their burden is lightened. Offering “Is there anything I can do to help?” and then helping is a great way to show this person love. Going the extra mile to help ease problems is how this person will feel loved best. Be careful to keep promised offers. Those who feel loved through acts of service appreciate help with chores, running errands or other small things.

Gift receivers thrive on thoughtfulness. What is important to this person is not the gift itself, or how much money it cost, but rather the effort behind the gift. Be sure to never forget their birthday, an anniversary or a holiday. If they are having a bad day, a gift of flowers or a treat are appreciated. Bring gifts not only on bad days, but also as a random surprise.

Those who feel loved with physical touch require frequent touch as expressions of affection. Physical touch as a love language has nothing to do with sexual touch. The best way to show love to this type of person is with appropriate physical touch: a hand hold or a warm hug. A person in a relationship with a person who enjoys physical touch should hug their partner soon after seeing him or her. The immediate embrace demonstrates to them that someone cares.

To understand a person’s primary love language, take the test at 5lovelanguages.com.

HARRY POTTER PERSONALITIES

BY DEVYNN MACLENNAN

Determine who is which character within your friend group:

HARRY POTTER: The person in the group everyone on campus seems to know. Some people shoot him down, but without him things would fall apart.

RON WEASLEY: The comedic relief of the group. He's goofy and awkward, but necessary for a fun time.

HERMIONE: The brain of the group, always knocking sense into people. Although she disapproves of almost everything the whole group does, she joins in and knows how to have a good time.

FRED AND GEORGE WEASLEY: The two people in the group who are practically inseparable. They're friends with the whole gang but regularly do their own things together.

DUMBLEDORE: The person who is wise beyond their years. Everyone goes to them whenever there's a problem because they always seem to know what to do, or what to say.

VOLDEMORT: The bald guy in the group with no nose.

SNAPE: The person who tends to get judged more harshly. In the end, he means well and helps people when no one is looking.

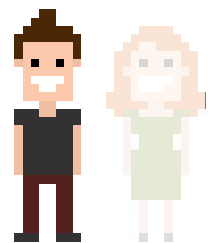

GINNY WEASLEY: The little sister in the group. She keeps to herself but wins over the boys.

NEVILLE LONGBOTTOM: The worrywart of the group. He is always second guessing everything and reminding the group what the rules are.

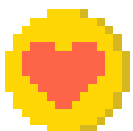

DRACO MALFOY: The one who tends to pick fights and have all the newest toys, but always has the best hair.

OPTIMISTIC SINGLE PLAYER

BY LIESL HAMMER

There is a kind of agony that comes from seeing Facebook friends' engagement photos cluttering a newsfeed. How does one stay optimistic as a one player when everyone else has found a teammate?

Meagan Brady from Orem, Utah, said that focusing on the good parts of her life helped her to feel more optimistic about being single.

"In the past couple years since changing my focus from what I didn't have to what I did have and enlarging those blessings through concerted effort, I have been so much happier, fulfilled, and optimistic overall than at any other time in my single life," Brady said.

Marcus Tanner, from Fruit Heights, Utah, is not too anxious about marriage. "It's not super important to me," he said. "A lot of people are dying to be married, but I like being single."

Tanner enjoys the freedoms of being single. He likes to make new friends and those friends keep him happy. Being single has benefits, and Tanner found a way to appreciate the perks of being single while having fun.

LaNaya Comsa from Peoria, Arizona, stays on her feet as a dancer at BYU and uses her hands as a seamstress. These activities, along with continuing her education, keep her hopeful.

"If you feel like you're doing something, progressing and helping people, that's when I'm happiest and OK with being single," Comsa said.

If Comsa's not busy, she starts feeling bad about her situation. "I go through cycles," she said. "Sometimes I get stuck thinking, 'I'm not on a mission any more and I have to get married, but there's no one!' And that's bad." She gets right back to working on whatever project has come up in life to keep progressing.

"Just make sure you're still moving," Comsa said. "Make sure you're not stagnant. Being stagnant makes you lose hope."

ARE YOU HAPPY, MAD OR SAD TAYLOR?

BY VICTORIA WILKINS

Think of your last breakup and answer these questions.

1 What are your feelings when you think about him?

- A. "It's a love story, baby, just say, 'Yes!'"
- B. "Someday I'll be living in a big old city and all you're ever gonna be is mean."
- C. "I miss screaming and fighting and kissing in the rain."

2 Your ex tells you he's in love with you. How do you feel?

- A. "Now that I'm clean I'm never gonna risk it."
- B. "We are never getting back together. Like ever."
- C. "Hey, you call me up again just to break me like a promise."

3 You see your ex with a new girl. What's your reaction?

- A. "And they'll tell you now, 'You're the lucky one.'"
- B. "There is nothing I do better than revenge."
- C. "Come back, come back, come back to me like you would if this was a movie."

4 You're trying to move on, but your ex won't leave you alone.

- A. "Tonight's the night when we forget about the heartbreaks."
- B. "You shouldn't be begging for forgiveness at my feet."
- C. "I can't say hello to you and risk another goodbye."

5 You're stalking your ex on social media, how do you feel?

- A. "It's like I got this music in my mind saying, 'It's gonna be all right.'"
- B. "This is looking like a contest of who can act like they care less."
- C. "I go back to December all the time."

▲ MOSTLY A

You're Happy Taylor. You're free from your ex, you're back in the dating scene and you couldn't be happier about it. You're ready to have fun again. #freedom. Listen to, "Shake It Off," "Love Story," "Clean," "The Lucky One" and "22."

■ MOSTLY B

You're Mad Taylor. You're so over it. You know you're much cuter than his new girl. You hear "your song" and immediately change it. Channel your anger and listen to, "Mean," "We Are Never Ever Getting Back Together," "Better Than Revenge," "Should've Said No" and "The Story of Us."

● MOSTLY C

You're Sad Taylor. Go ahead and watch sappy romance movies and eat ice cream right out of the tub. We understand, we've all been there. Take some time, and everything will be OK. Listen to, "The Way I Loved You," "I Almost Do," "All Too Well," "If This Was a Movie" and "Back to December."

EVERYTHING BUT THE RING

They know their wedding date, colors, location, and you think she's going wedding dress shopping this weekend, but they aren't engaged yet.

"I asked them if they were dating and she told me they were engaged to be engaged. I laughed and asked if she had a ring for that too, and as she lifted her left hand I saw a CTR ring on her ring finger while she explained very seriously that yes, she did," said Kenzie Knapp, a philosophy major from Provo.

What does engaged to be engaged actually mean? Some say it's a stage in the relationship between a monogamous couple when the members are expected to wed in the near future but will more likely break up the next week.

Others say it's the moment they announce they're engaged on social media and they happen to also announce the time and place of the soon to be wedding.

Some others are more optimistic to say it's when couples are planning on getting engaged but for some reason hasn't gotten engaged yet, most likely due to financial situations. Or, they're just commitment phobic so they're prolonging the inevitable but keeping the relationship going.

WEDDINGS 101 FOR SINGLE PEOPLE

BY ASHLYN ALLRED

GENERAL ETIQUETTE

In general, rules for weddings are the same for LDS and non-LDS weddings alike.

There is no established Mormon wedding etiquette.

RECEIVING LINE

One way that LDS weddings are unique is the often-utilized receiving line. If you decide not to go through the line or miss it, be sure to take time to talk to the couple during the reception.

WHEN A RELATIONSHIP MAKES YOU SAY 'EW!'

There always seems to be that one couple that no one else likes to spend time with. Maybe they're too touchy-feely, too obsessed with each other to have fun with anyone else or too much drama. Worse is when a good friend is one of the individuals in this annoying relationship. Here are some tips to overcome irritation at a friend's relationship:

TALK ABOUT OTHER THINGS

If the relationship causes cringes and eye rolling, talk about something else. A relationship that is difficult to handle doesn't provide an out for being a good friend. "Spend time one-on-one, and avoid bringing up their relationship," said Griffin Moore, a freshman studying business.

RE-EVALUATE THE SITUATION

Their relationship should be about no one but the two of them. Remove personal selfish feelings from the equation. "If your friend likes a guy, that's great, and it doesn't matter how you feel about it," said Leah Daley, a freshman studying exercise science. "Their relationship isn't about you."

BE HAPPY FOR THEM

It might be tough at times, but be happy for friends. Even if their post on social media makes everyone sick, like it anyway. "Be their friend, support them and don't be critical or tell them every negative opinion you have," said Theresa Evans, a junior studying business management.

REMEMBER

Even if a relationship seems unbearable, it is not worth losing a friend. They might break up after a few weeks, but they also might end up married. If the couple does last, it's important to remain close and not miss out on friends' important life events.

DATES

If the envelope is addressed to you "and guest," then you may bring a date. If not, come to the wedding with a group of invited friends.

GIFTS

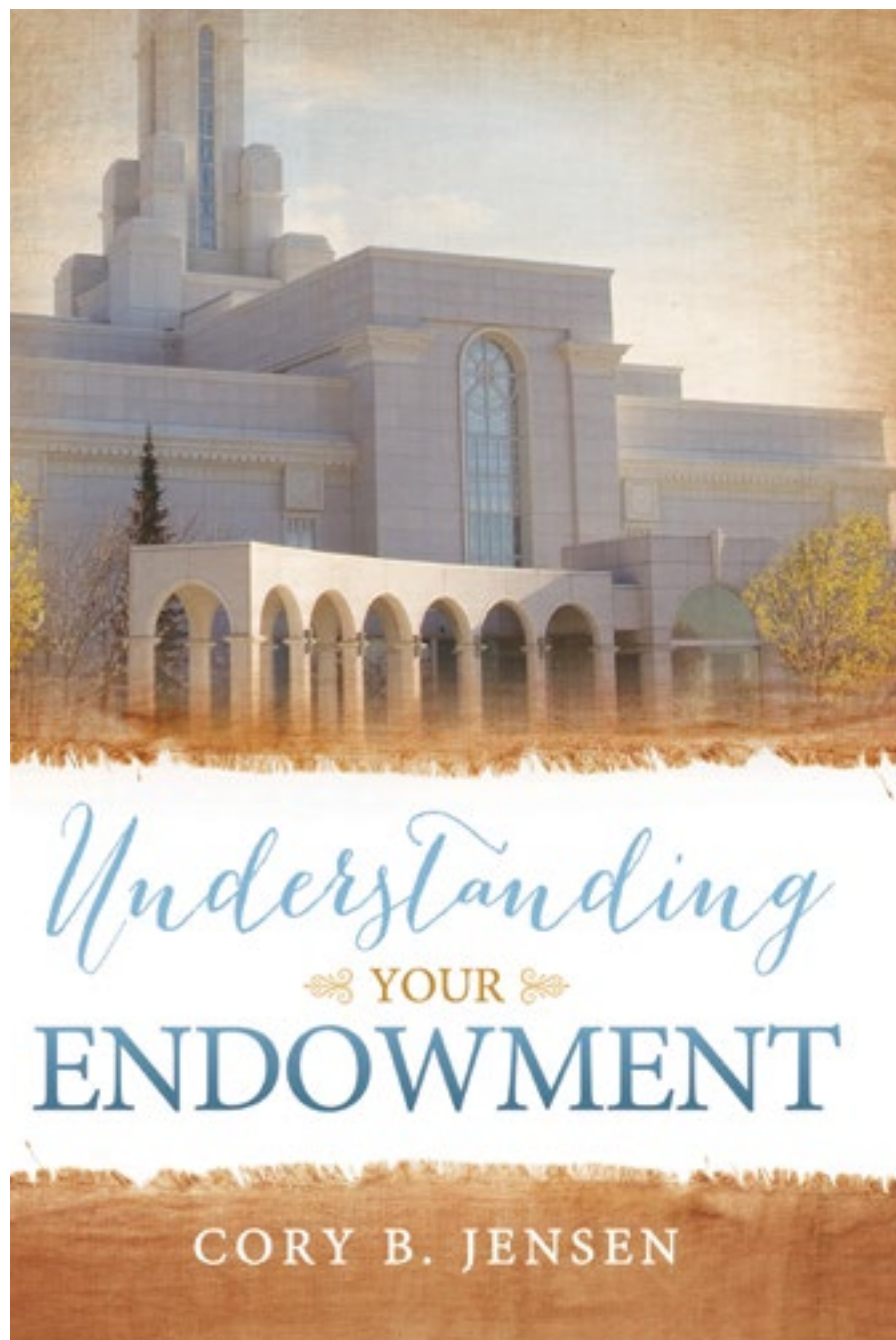

If you're invited separately, then you need to bring a gift. However, if your family is invited and you do not receive your own invitation, then one gift is good.

REMEMBER

Don't forget the most important thing to remember is that the wedding is not about you. It's the bride and groom's special day.

This easy-to-read book clearly explains the meaning of the temple ordinances in your life. While still respecting the temple's sacred nature, this book helps you unravel some of the mystery and more fully appreciate the beautiful purposes for those ordinances. Whether you are preparing to go for the first time or have been attending for many years, Understanding Your Endowment will enrich your temple worship.

"I LOVED it. I couldn't put it down because it was so fascinating!"

THE FRIEND ZONE

By Devynn MacLennan

The friend zone is the awkward twilight zone that keeps people from advancing their friendships to a romantic level. Most people have experienced the common yet tragic tale: they start falling for someone, but then quickly have their hopes dashed because the other person simply doesn't see them in a romantic context.

Being friend-zoned can be terrible, but to the friend zoner it can be a useful tool. The difficulty arises when fears of friend zoning not only ruin any chance of a romantic relationship, but a chance of a friendship as well.

To save people from hurt feelings while also making someone aware they are in the friend zone, some use the avoidance method or time as their weapon. However, the strategy of "I'll just wait it out" doesn't work because people won't get the hint.

"Friend-zoning to some people is like waiting in a doctor's office waiting room," said Chase Johnson, a senior majoring in advertising. "They just think that one day their number is going to be called. But unlike the doctor's office, it never will. So they should really just walk out."

So what's the best way to friend zone someone and still keep a healthy friendship?

While blatantly talking about the relationship status might seem premature or out of someone's comfort zone, a simpler approach is to let him or her know the relationship is purely platonic by using friend-affirming actions.

"I think talking about other boys, dates you've been on, mentioning setting them up on other dates and explicitly and often calling them 'friend,' definitely gives them the hint that you only want to be friends," said Mackenzie Knapp, a sophomore from Provo. "High fives are the worst."

However, sometimes even that won't cut it. Some people need to be told while they're friendship is appreciated there is no chance of a romantic relationship. While holding off on that conversation may seem easier and potentially less hurtful, it may ruin any chance of a friendship.

"Let them know how you're feeling as soon as you know how you're feeling. Then you avoid any chances of leading them on which could damage potential to be friends down the road," said Garrison Wilkins, a freshman studying mechanical engineering.

Friend-zoning can be hard on everyone involved. It's necessary to communicate effectively so everyone is on the same page, and don't get their feelings hurt beyond repair.

GETTING BAS

BY MADDISON DAYTON

When it comes to matters of the heart, it's easy to let things get a little fuzzy. Love's battlefield has never been considered easy to navigate but there are a few basic tools a person can use to get through fairly unscathed:

Accepting a Compliment

Accepting a compliment can be hard. Many fear that acknowledging that they look good, or that their hair is in fact quaffed exceptionally, will make them seem into themselves. However, the solution is simple. Dr. Jeffrey Hill, a professor in the Family Life Department, suggested that the best way to accept a compliment was to simply say, "Thank you! I appreciate that."

The answer is sincere yet humble. It allows a person to feel comfortable complimenting their date and it avoids the awkward and often uncomfortable self-deprecation that often follows a well intentioned compliment.

Deciding Who Should Pay

On a planned date there is an unmistakable drop in the stomach when someone doesn't know who is supposed to pay. Good intentions aside, this moment has the potential to become a stumbling point on the date. There is an easy way to navigate this potentially awkward situation.

Tammy Hill, a licensed marriage and family therapist and adjunct professor at BYU, offered a simple solution: "Whomever is asking for the date should be the one who pays for the date," Hill said. "In steady relationships discuss fair distribution of payment for activities done jointly."

"If it is not understood it should be discussed before the date," said Jeffrey Hill.

Hannah Lowry, a sophomore at BYU, uses this technique to save her from embarrassing moments on dates. "I just find a causal, maybe funny way to bring it up," Lowry said. "I don't want my date to feel awkward so I do my best to keep it light. I always go into a situation planning on it being me ... just in case.

Friends and Family

Friends and family play a significant role in lives and can be a source of advice. Where matters of the heart are concerned, the people who care the most may be the most eager to get involved. However, ultimately the relationship is not theirs, so knowing how to involve them appropriately is key.

"You should introduce your significant other to family and friends when it is likely that you will become a couple," said Jeffrey Hill. "This is good to do before dating exclusively. Though you make the decision, if all of your family and friends have concerns about your significant other, there is probably a problem."

Go to friends and family for advice. However Tammy Hill warns to "be prepared to listen." Tammy Hill said when asking for advice, the response given may not be ideal, but it is important to listen to advice given from loved ones.

In addition, take their counsel into account, but make the decision for yourself.

"I love my friends and family and I know that they always have my back. But I do have to trust that I know myself well enough to make the final call when it comes to dating," Lowry said. "I will always take their advice into account, but it's important to me that I always listen to my feelings because I am the one who has to live with my decisions."

Conversation

Good conversation is key to any functional date. "Everything can go horribly wrong, but if my date and I had a good time talking and had a lot of fun despite everything, it doesn't matter that the dinner was cold or if we got a flat tire," Lowry said.

So how do you become a good conversationalist? “The main thing is to talk about your date, not about yourself,” said Jeff Hill. Actively listening to your date is also essential. This means maintaining eye contact and communicating back, verbally and nonverbally.

BACK TO

Another key tip: “Read and have some thoughts about issues of the day,” said Tammy Hill. By keeping yourself up to date and aware, you not only show your date that you stay informed but you always have a conversation topic in your back pocket. This also helps you avoid being the only one on a group date who is unable to contribute to a conversation.

Above all, when conversation lulls, do not pull out your phone. Phones should be turned off and should only be used in emergencies.

“It is the height of rudeness to be checking social media on a date or texting someone else,” said Jeffrey Hill.

Although you may feel awkward, resist the urge to pull out your phone. It will let your date feel valued and more comfortable.

Hanging Out

Jeffrey Hill said that the only appropriate time to be hanging out rather than dating is before knowing a person’s name and phone number.

It can be hard to transition from aimlessly spending time together, but when you really care about a relationship you should be willing to put in time and effort to plan things for you to do together.

“If I really like a guy; I make an effort to show him, not just tell him and a lot of the time I do that by helping us make plans,” Lowry said. “It doesn’t have to be big or grand—maybe we just plan a movie night with friends—but the effort put in by both of us helps the other person feel important.”

Avoiding ample amounts of unplanned downtime shows a significant other that they are valued. Hanging out with a person may feel easier or less stressful than going out on a limb and asking someone on a date, but may not be enough to cultivate a relationship.

STREET STYLE

Curated by TWO

Streetwear is all about wearing basic pieces well.

Choose high-quality items you can mix and match. Go with simple and dainty pieces when accessorizing. You don't want to overwhelm the outfit; you want to compliment it.

By going with the basics, all eyes will be on you because you will look your best and feel it too.

Color

Don't go color crazy. Keep colors simple with white, black and grey. If you want a color, go with a muted tone but keep the colors in the same family. This mixture of colors can stand alone or together because of the simplicity.

Warmer weather allows layering, a perfect complement to the simplistic and versatile color palette. A more simplistic color palette allows versatility in your wardrobe and provides you with a classy ready to go look.

Fit

Tailoring clothing is essential. It doesn't matter how many pieces of clothing you own if the pieces don't fit well. It is more practical to tailor two pairs of good jeans than purchase five pairs of ill-fitting jeans. Clothing that fits well makes people look more polished, put together and attractive.

The Evolution

BY VICTORIA WILKINS

Has there ever been a person who does not immediately strike another as exceptionally attractive, but after spending some time with them, becomes better looking?

Dr. Lori Schade is an adjunct with BYU's Marriage and Family Therapy graduate program and is a marriage and family therapist, specializing in couples therapy at Suncrest Counseling. Schade said attraction plays a huge role in dating because it is the driving force between two individuals. In other words, people want to date people they are attracted to.

"Physical attraction embodies how drawn we are to certain individuals, based maybe initially on their physical attractiveness, but in longer and deeper relationships, it includes a lot more qualities," Schade said.

Other qualities that draw individuals together include a sense of humor, kindness, consideration and responsiveness. Both physical attractiveness and other qualities that attract individuals differ from person to person. For this reason, a classically good-looking person does not attract everyone they come in contact with.

"Many people can think someone is physically attractive, but they may have other qualities that actually repel, rather than attract, the other individual, such as sarcasm or selfishness,” Schade said.

of Attraction

James Dee Higley, a BYU psychology professor, teaches an introduction to psychology class and focuses one topic in the class around the question, “Why do I fall in love?” Higley said that physical attractiveness is the beginning determinant if we date someone and fall in love with that person.

Higley said there are two predictors that people will date and fall in love. The first is being in close proximity to each other. The closer two people live, the more likely they are to date. The second predictor is the level of attraction. Levels of attraction are measured on a scale from one to 10, with 10 being the most attractive. Higley said that an individual with an attractive level of seven will date others with a level of seven on the attraction scale.

“This may be why a pretty girl will stay home with no date on a Friday night,” Higley said. “Because a five is too nervous to ask someone with a higher attractive scale, for fear of rejection.”

While attractive scales often determine who will date, it is important to remember that a person’s physical appearance is not the only factor that affects a person’s appeal. Looks are not everything, and this is especially true with dating and courtship.

One of the most important decisions a young adult will face is who they choose to marry.

It is a decision that can cause worry and stress. Deciding who to be with forever is a daunting task.

Often the fear is of choosing the wrong person—or the possibility of finding out too late that the person is not who they seemed to be.

Michael Goodman, BYU associate church history professor, teaches a class about the eternal family. One concept Goodman focuses on is determining which characteristics are necessary but not sufficient when dating a person.

A person's personality traits may be a necessity for a partner, but personality traits will never be sufficient reason to marry. Character traits a person has are much more important than personality traits.

Goodman also said that people need to differentiate between what is necessary and what is sufficient when deciding whether to deepen a dating relationship. Desirable personality traits are important, but not a sufficient marriage basis.

Prof. Michael Goodman provided the following couplets to illustrate the difference between personality traits and character traits:

The ability to determine between personality and character traits is an important skill to develop.

"This ability can go a long way in minimizing the possibility of marrying someone who seems so wonderful only to find out that they were not who we thought they were in the beginning," Goodman said.

Personality traits are amoral, or morally neutral, by nature. Because personality traits are not good or bad traits, they can be viewed positively or negatively.

"For this reason, personality traits may be necessary to you," Goodman said.

She married him because he was fun and romantic.

She divorced him because he was irresponsible and lazy.

"Meaning, you won't develop a relationship with a person who does not have that personality trait, but it can never be a sufficient reason to marry someone."

Rather than seeking personality traits when choosing a person to marry, people should look for character traits, Goodman said.

"Personality traits tell you very little about a person's character – which is what you need to know before deciding that you want to spend eternity together," Goodman said.

Goodman further explained that character traits, unlike personality traits, are moral by nature. Rather than the ability to be used to bring someone up or tear them down, character traits tell about the enduring nature of a person.

A person might decide they only want to marry a person who is intelligent. But intelligence is a personality trait, and an insufficient reason to marry. How a person uses their intelligence is a character trait. If they use it to help another learn, it is a good trait; If they use it to make others feel insignificant or small, it is a bad trait.

Elder Richard G. Scott of the Quorum of the Twelve spoke in the April 1999 General Conference and gave advice on character traits to seek.

Most decisions a will make

He married her because she was such a beauty.

He divorced her because all she thinks about is her looks.

She married him for his frugality and creative dating.

She divorced him because he was such a tightwad.

“As you seek an eternal companion, look for someone who is developing the essential attributes that bring happiness: a deep love of the Lord and of His commandments, a determination to live them, one that is kindly understanding, forgiving of others, and willing to give of self, with the desire to have a family crowned with beautiful children and a commitment to teach them the principles of truth in the home,” Elder Scott said.

Each of the character traits Elder Scott listed lead to goodness and true love. If they are not used in a negative way, they lead to happiness.

As a dater, a person should look for essential character traits in potential suitors. Assessing a person's character traits can take some time, Goodman said, because it is crucial to witness how a person acts in a variety of situations.

“You don't want to marry someone who is currently acting kind; you want to marry someone who is kind by nature,” Goodman said. “Current behavior, though very important and necessary, is not a sufficient way of determining the character of a person.”

A person who is kind and thoughtful may be a necessary prerequisite for marriage, but it is not sufficient if a person is kind only in a one-on-one situation. Although a person may be kind to a certain individual, it does not mean that the person is truly kind. It is vastly more important to evaluate how a person treats all people. Determining the character of a person will be helpful in knowing how a person will react in a number of different situations.

“The key to judging character in relation to our fellow man lies in how we treat others we are not trying to impress,” Goodman said. “Especially important is how we treat others we are not currently pleased with as well as how we treat our family.”

In order to know if a person is sincerely a kind, charitable, honest, spiritual, forgiving or selfless person, observe how they interact with those they are not so concerned with impressing. If the person is kind to friends, family members, roommates and strangers, this will tell much more about their character than how they treat the person they are trying to court.

People should decide which characteristics are essential to them in a spouse and then determine if the person they are dating is that kind of person. The ability to differentiate a person's character and personality traits will help a would-be spouse determine whether the person they are dating is someone they would like to marry.

Pacing a

BYU and other areas with a high concentration of young Mormons have their own culture regarding dating and marriage. Young Mormons are known for accelerated dating: “I love yous” being thrown out in weeks, an engagement within months, and a wedding thrown in somewhere during the winter or summer breaks.

But why is it different? Is the “fast paced dating scene” a good thing? And what is the best way to pace a relationship?

“Dating as an LDS student is different than dating at other colleges because we come from a perspective of ordinances, and marriage is first and foremost an ordinance,” said Guy L. Dorius, a BYU Religious Education professor.

Because of this, priorities for an earlier marriage are encouraged from professors and even other students.

“The culture of dating at BYU is that you can only date for love and marriage and you’re wasting your time if you’re not dating someone with the goal of being married,” said Jordan Blackhurst, a junior from Las Vegas. “This causes stress on a relationship and forces it to go at a rate where you don’t have the time to really get to know someone.”

It’s obvious that dating and marriage play a significant role in the social culture at BYU. Marriage courses like

Relationship

BY DEVYNN MACLENNAN

“Eternal Families” and other similarly themed classes are offered to students, and on-campus housing is available for married student couples.

“Couples rush progression so they can gain that title of status,” says Lexi Nilson, an illustration major from Highland. “I think people want to be in a relationship just to be in one because that’s what’s expected of them,” she said.

Since relationships are so heavily emphasized, the desire to be in one is significant, which leads to people rushing relationships because of social pressures. However, because of the culture’s unique views on marriage, this emphasis could be expected.

“We’re marrying for different reasons than the world, which will make our pacing different than the world’s,” Dorius said.

Latter-day Saints’ pacing is normally different. But what makes a perfect amount of time before he buys the ring? How fast is too fast? And is there a way to tell?

“It’s necessary in a relationship to pace it in a way that you’re able to see people at their best and at their worst so you actually know what you’re getting yourself into,” said Shane Monrow, a sophomore from New Jersey.

This means pacing in a relationship could be completely different for different people. If two people grew up together and started dating, they probably know each other at a deeper level, and so their courtship might be shorter.

Picnics for Every Time of Day

❶ Muffin Mix-It Up

Yields 24 muffins

1¾ cup flour
¾ cup sugar
2½ teaspoon baking powder
¾ teaspoon salt
1 egg, well-beaten
½ cup vegetable oil

Blueberry variation:

6 ounces fresh blueberries

Banana nut variation:

2 mashed bananas
½ cup chopped walnuts

Orange marmalade variation:

½ cup orange marmalade
2 cups powdered sugar
¾ cup milk

Combine dry ingredients in small bowl. Combine wet ingredients in larger bowl. Add dry ingredients to wet mixture until combined. Do not over mix. Add blueberries or bananas or marmalade. Top banana muffins with nuts after batter is poured into muffin tins.

Bake at 350 degrees for 12 minutes. To create glaze for orange marmalade muffins, beat powdered sugar and milk together glaze reaches desired consistency. Add milk or additional powdered sugar to get glaze to desired consistency.

❷ Caprese Panini

Yields 4 sandwiches

8 slices, white bread
2 large tomatoes
8 slices mozzarella cheese
16 leaves basil
4 tablespoons butter
Salt and pepper

Heat pan on medium high heat. Butter two slices of bread. Assemble sandwiches with bread, then mozzarella, tomatoes, basil, salt and pepper, mozzarella, bread.

Grill sandwich with butter side down until golden and cheese has melted.

❸ Chicken Salad Sandwich

Yields 10 sandwiches

10 mini croissants
1½ cups shredded chicken breast
½ cup olive oil mayo
1 tablespoon sugar
1 teaspoon apple cider vinegar
2 stalks celery
¼ cup red onion
¼ cup dried cranberries
¼ cup slivered almonds
Salt and pepper

Drain liquid from canned chicken and mix with mayo, sugar and apple cider vinegar. Add in chopped celery, red onion, cranberries and slivered almonds. Add salt and pepper to taste. Add ¼ cup mixture to each small croissant horizontally sliced.

❹ Mandy Ray's Quiche

Yields 8 slices of quiche

1 package frozen pie crust
3 large eggs
1 cup shredded cheddar cheese

1 cup chopped bacon
1 tablespoon fresh chives
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
½ cup cream

Cook pie crust for twenty minutes at 350 degrees. Use pie weights to keep bottom of crust flat. Whisk eggs in medium bowl then add cream and milk and beat until color and texture is consistent.

Beat in chives and salt. Layer bacon and cheese at bottom of pie crust then gently pour egg mixture on top. Add extra cheese if desired. Bake for 40 minutes at 350 degrees.

❺ Very Berry Pie

Yields 8 slices of pie

2 frozen pie crusts
2 pounds fresh strawberries
6 ounces fresh raspberries
6 ounces fresh blackberries
6 ounces fresh blueberries
¼ cup cornstarch
¾ cup white sugar

Wash and dry fruit. Combine in medium bowl. Whisk cornstarch and sugar together in separate bowl, then gently spread over fruit. Let fruit mixture sit uncovered for forty minutes; texture will become wet.

While fruit mixture rests, cook the bottom pie crust for 20 minutes at 350 degrees (use pie weights to keep the crust flat on bottom).

Remove pie weights once crust is cooked. Divide top piecrust into inch-wide strips for lattice top. When fruit is ready, pour mixture into baked piecrust. Weave the lattice top and bake for 38 minutes at 350 degrees.

OPEN TO POSSIBILITIES

BY WHITNEY HALES

Put thousands of college-aged LDS singles in one city and the result is predictable: Provo is obsessed with dating. Some students fill their social calendar with several dates per week; others rarely go out.

So what can men and women do to put themselves on the market in Provo? Here are a few simple ideas.

GET INVOLVED

Classes. Ward activities. Intramurals and clubs. In Provo, there's no shortage of ways for students to meet potential dates.

Katie Maxwell, a nursing major from Draper, Utah, took social dance two years ago and compared her experience to a semester-long round of speed dating.

Everyone knew each other, and this made it easier for people to ask out other people in the class,

Maxwell said. She went hiking, attended performances and got dinner with various classmates.

"If you get involved, you have more opportunities to meet new people," Maxwell said. "You can meet them if you go to one activity, but if you go to more than one, you can actually get to know them."

COMMUNICATE WELL

Jordan Christensen, a mechanical engineering major from Cedar Hills, Utah, said it's important to have good conversations with other people.

"I like people that are easy to talk to, not necessarily that I have tons in common with, but that they act interested in the things I do," Christensen said. "They like to have fun, and they're more happy, upbeat people."

He said sometimes many students in Provo overthink and complicate dating, but it doesn't actually have to be that difficult.

"People get so worried about what other people are going to think or if their date's a good idea," Christensen said. "Just do it."

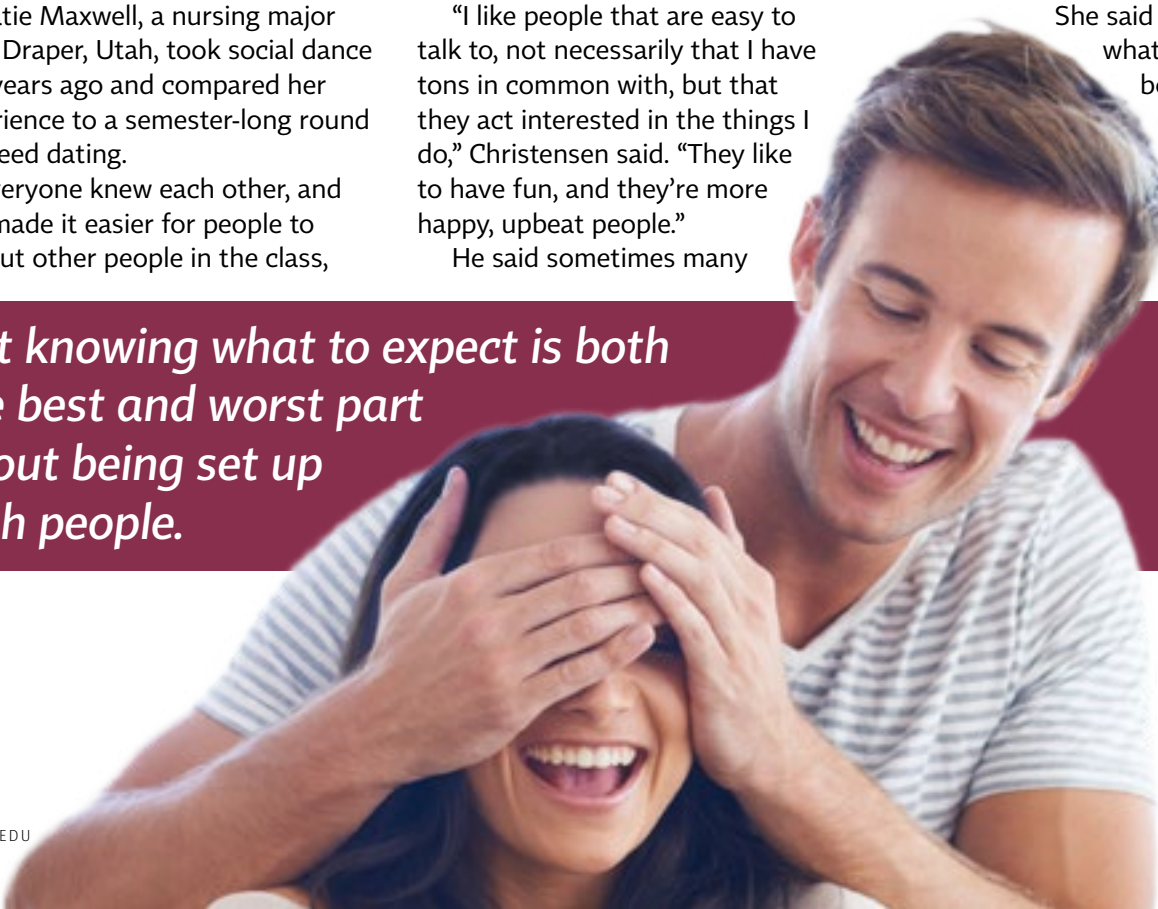

BE OPEN TO BLIND DATES

Everyone knows people who know people who know people, and many students love the idea of matchmaking.

Makenzie Haynes, an anthropology major from Rupert, Idaho, went on several blind dates last semester.

She said not knowing what to expect is both the best and worst part about being set up with people.

LOOKING BEYOND

the Nametag

By Devynn MacLennan
& Victoria Wilkins

Some people assume that a returned missionary, boy or girl, is at a higher degree of righteousness and perfection, which then makes them datable without caution. Although most returned missionaries are disciplined, outward focused and spiritually converted, there are some who gained nothing more than a few funny stories and two years tacked onto their age.

“Everybody comes back from their mission changed. However, the degree to how much they’ve change is different,” said Robbie Dorius a senior studying communications. “It’s easy to tell within the first three months if that change will be long lasting or just a temporary change.”

It is important to not be overconfident by the title “returned missionary” when dating a person. A missionary tag attached to someone’s scripture case might blind someone they don’t know in the assumption they are perfectly datable. Although serving a mission is admirable, people still need to decipher what is necessary in dating someone and figure out their true character.

“People are really good at putting on a good face for the first few dates, that’s why you have to really get to know someone before committing yourself to a relationship,” said Kenzie Knapp a junior studying philosophy.

Dorius said it’s really important to observe people to determine their character. While some people can be blinded by the return missionary title, others may not even consider dating those who didn’t serve.

Elder Jeffery R. Holland of the Quorum of the Twelve spoke at the Face to Face with Young Single Adults in March 2016. He answered a question discussing the topic of young women who haven’t served missions, and the social consequences that result from it.

“What we’re dealing with here is the worth and wonder and beauty of human beings and choices being made and agency that exists,” said Elder Holland.

Although Elder Holland was directing his answer towards young women, the same thing can be said for young men.

Elder Holland continued by saying, “We do not want anyone to feel inadequate or left out or undignified or tarnished because she did not serve to a mission. We are a little irritated with young men (and women) who say, well I’m not going to date you because you didn’t serve a mission.”

Relationships should be built on communication and getting to know who a person really is. Get to know their passions, their goals, who they are now and who they want to become.

“Don’t just look at their resume or the things that they’ve done. Look at who they are as a person,” Knapp said.

DATING DIARIES

Some dates just don't go the way people planned—or wanted. BYU students shared dating stories that make bad dates seem like bliss.

"I got asked out on a blind double date. My date seemed really nice and I was pretty happy with the way things were going ... until we met up with the other couple and it was my ex-boyfriend. Things got really awkward really quickly."

— Karli

"Setups are the worst. Especially when they end up being with your second cousin."

— Calvin

"I went on a blind date and was worried about the guy being crazy (he didn't have Facebook so I couldn't even stalk him) so I made my friends take down his license plate when he picked me up, but mostly as a joke. Forty-five minutes later people knocked on his door and a group of girls said they were playing bigger or better. It was all my best friends who found his car, then found his apartment, and eventually found us. I was laughing so hard I started crying, and he had no idea the correlation, and never found out either."

— Danielle

"I went on a date with a girl and during the date she ran into one of her friends and talked about this guy she was really into. The guy wasn't me."

— Jordan

"This guy asked me out and I was actually pretty excited for the date ... until he called me the wrong name four times, one of them being in the post-date text."

— Anna

"I asked this girl on a date and I was really excited about it. I picked her up in my really big truck, and when she opened her apartment door I learned that she broke her leg the day before. When we got to my truck we couldn't figure out how to get her in the passenger seat because the truck was so big and she couldn't bend her leg. She ended up having to lie in the back. She was in so much pain and it was just really bad timing."

— Jared

"This guy asked me out and seemed really excited about it. After he picked me up we got hot chocolate and he talked to me about a business opportunity he thought would be great for me ... all night long. We never went out again."

— Michelle

"THIS GUY TOOK ME ON THE LONGEST MARATHON DATE KNOWN TO MAN."

I was so ready for it to be done so I asked him to take me home. Two hours later, he completed my request. I was so tired on the drive back that I started crying."

— Anna

Names have been changed to protect those who haven't yet figured out how to have great dates. If you know anyone like that, share with them a copy of TWO.

We love to see you smile!
